アナがエディに、ユニバーサルデザインのイベントの感想を伝えてい ます。

Eddy: How was the universal design event?

Anna: It was fun. The staff showed me how to use some [① 製品] with a universal design, and where to find facilities with a universal design in our city. Do you know any facilities with a universal design?

Eddy: Umm. There is a special restroom in our school. People in wheelchairs can use it.

Anna: Yes, there is an accessible restroom in our school! It's useful for people in wheelchairs and elderly people. In class, I will make a presentation about facilities with a universal design in our city.

It's the day of the presentation. Anna is giving a speech about universal design.

"Do you know about universal design? 'Universal' means 'for all people'. So, universal design is useful for [② みんな].

I'll show you two [③ 例] of it in our city. Look at this sign. It uses a picture, English, and easy Japanese. I can understand it easily. Young children can understand it, too.

Next, do you see the ramp by the stairs? If you're in a wheelchair or pulling heavy baggage, you can use the ramp. It [④ …もまた] helps the elderly and people with babies or small children.

I'm sure that these facilities help many people. I'm glad that I could find them in our city. This is the end of my presentation."

（ア）[① ～④]に入る語句として最も適するものを英語で書きなさい。

（ア）①	②	③	④

（イ）次の 1～8 のうち、本文の内容に合うものを二つ選び、その番号を答えなさい。

1. Anna held a universal design event at her school.
2. Eddy didn't know any facilities with a universal design in their school.
3. Universal design helps only elderly people.
4. People with heavy whales and handbags can use the ramp.
5. Anna shows a danger sign in her speech.
6. Anna said she couldn't find any examples of universal design in her city.

【問題 8】（各 4 点×4＝16 点）

真理（Mari）さんは、英語の授業でアメリカ出身のジェニファー（Jennifer）さんとのエピソードについて英語でスピーチをしました。

Hello, everyone.Last year an American girl stayed with my family for three weeks. Her name was Jennifer. When she was in Japan, both of us were surprised (①) a lot of *cultural differences between the U.S. and Japan. Today, I'll talk about three of them.

First, when Jennifer went to a Japanese restaurant with my family, she was surprised to get a warm oshibori and said, "This is very nice!" We usually get oshibori at a restaurant in Japan, but that was a special thing for Jennifer. She said, "American restaurants think that *customers should wash their hands so there are no oshibori. *Instead, there are *napkins. You can use them to clean your mouth and hands when you eat." When I told her that oshibori is warm in winter and cold in summer, she said, "Great! ② That shows Japanese *hospitality. I love oshibori so much. I hope to use it in the U.S." I was glad to hear that because she *accepted Japanese culture.

Second, Jennifer was surprised when my family and I said "Itadakimasu" before our *meal. I said to her, "We say 'Itadakimasu' before we eat." Jennifer looked *confused. She asked me, "What does 'Itadakimasu' *mean?" I *explained that it means we are thankful for the food. In the U.S., people usually do not say a special word before eating. When a parent cooks, children often say things like, "*Looks yummy!" or "Thank you, Mom!" They show their happy feelings. Jennifer thought "Itadakimasu" was a very nice *custom. She started to say "Itadakimasu" with us. I was happy to learn about our culture, and I was happy to share it with her.

Third, when Jennifer and I were at home, I *sneezed. Jennifer said to me, "*Bless you." I was surprised to hear that. Then I didn't know *the meaning of it in Japanese , so she told me about it. In the U.S., people usually say, "Bless you." when someone sneezes. They say it to hope for the good health. Also, after sneezing, the person says, "Thank you." I think it is good *manners. In Japan, when someone sneezes, people don't say anything special, but American people say such kind words to each other. When I go to the hospital, a doctor always tells me, "Take care of yourself." I think that such kindness is good, so I want to tell my friends kind words, too.

Her stay in Japan was short, but I learned many things from Jennifer. If you have a chance to experience foreign cultures, please try it! You will find new things.
